Forty-six years since its beginnings, this was Glastonbury's (1)..... (RAINY) year yet. And with the rain came mud, and with the mud came chaos. The sudden onslaught of 180,000 festivalgoers, who all seemed to descend on the festival before the gates even opened this year, ended in 12-hour traffic (2)..... (JAM), closed-off motorways and towed cars.

The festival is set in 900 beautiful acres of the Vale of Avalon, a site which (3)..... (HOLD) much religious and mythological importance. (4)..... (SAY) to be where King Arthur is buried and where the Holy Grail lies, the sprawling fields of Glastonbury are sacred and spiritual. For five glorious, limitless days, it becomes a magical, fantasy world to which you can escape. And as you wander and explore, whiling away (5)..... (THIS) days in utopia, the mud will just cease to matter.

There really are very few rules at Glastonbury. You are free to camp where you wish, wear what you want. This feeling of freedom is contagious and (6)..... (BRING) people of all backgrounds, ages, races and ethnicities together in a beautiful unity. You'll be witness to the weirdest and (7)..... (WONDERFUL) human interactions at Glastonbury, and you'll most likely find (8)..... (YOU) asking why life can't always be like this.
